The 106 bus service runs three days per week between the towns of Kendal and Penrith in Cumbria. The service is run by a commercial company but is commissioned by the 106 Bus Partnership which is a voluntary lead organisation. The Partnership commissions the service on a set rate per day and any fares collected on the bus are offset against the daily cost. As with many rural routes, there is often a shortfall between the cost of running the service and the fares collected. This is met by subsidising the route with grants and donations. The 106 route currently requires around £8,600 per year in subsidy.
